The Old Dutch Church at Cats-kill.

In 1732 the number of the members of the church at Catskill was about about one hundred. It was an orderly gether-the Salisburys and the Van Bergens from the neighborhood, the Van Vetchens and the Duboises from the banks of the Catskill, the Van Ordens the Abeels from the Bak-Oven. Some came on horseback over the roads which The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. had been cut through the forests, others tion all were armed. The men wore queues and three-cornered hats of brown beaver; their knee-breeches and their long waistcoats were of homespun; their the light of the open fire during the winter evenings, were of coarse blue bushel of grain converted into liquor yarn; their low shoes were of russet leather, and bere large buckles of brass or polished steel. The women were reaching only to the ankle, and dved black with logwood, or brown with but-Van Vetchen, and Neelbje Van Bergen, wore strings of gold beads about their
